Diego Rivera

Head Winemaker, Amayna / Boya

Diego Rivera started winemaking in 2010 after receiving his degree in agronomy and enology from the Chile's Universidad Catolica. After graduation, he traveled abroad to experience making hard cider in England and work harvest and made wine in Burgundy the year after. He returned back to Chile to work for Viña Terranoble in Maule for three years and in 2015 went north to Leyda to work for Viña Garces Silva on the coast.

Diego is now the Head Winemaker for both VGS wines Amayna and Boya and loves the challenge of working with vines grown next to the Pacific Ocean. He believes Leyda is one of Chile's most unique terroirs and has an amazing future in producing some of Chile's finest wines.
